

Randy Roberson

Director, Member Engagement NACUBO

Randy Roberson is director, member engagement, at NACUBO in Washington, D.C. He is currently the lead staff person assessing the needs of, and developing member products and services for research university and system business officers. In addition, he manages the Future Business Officers Program, co-manages the New Business Officers Program, and serves as staff liaison to the Council of Higher Education Management Associations. Before joining the staff of NACUBO, Roberson worked from 2002-2011 at the University of Maryland, College Park, most recently as a development officer. From 1997-2002, he worked at his alma mater, Oglethorpe University, in various administrative roles including assistant to the president. He began his career as a press aide to Georgia Governor Zell Miller, creator of the HOPE Scholarship. Roberson graduated from Oglethorpe with a bachelor's degree in history and a minor in music. He completed his master's degree in public management at the University of Maryland's School of Public Policy.